
HRAs, HSAs, and Health FSAs – What's the Difference?

Updated May 2018

Health reimbursement arrangements (HRAs), health savings accounts (HSAs) and health care flexible spending accounts (HFSAs) are generally referred to as account-based plans. That is because each participant has their own account, at least for bookkeeping purposes. Under the tax rules, amounts may be contributed to these accounts (with certain restrictions) and used for health care on a tax-favored basis.

The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) has added new requirements that affect HRAs and HFSAs. Most HFSAs and HRAs will need to be amended to meet the new ACA requirements. HSAs generally are not affected by the ACA.

Most recently, the 21st Century Cures Act (Cures Act) provided a method for certain small employers to reimburse individual health coverage premiums up to a dollar limit through HRAs called "Qualified Small Employer Health Reimbursement Arrangements" (QSE HRAs). This provision was effective on January 1, 2017.

The chart below describes the main characteristics of these types of accounts, and should help you decide which option is the best for your situation.

| May the employer impose additional eligibility requirements? (continued) | | program incentives, or any other type of incentive/reward program. | |
| May an employee contribute to the account? | Yes, up to the lesser of $2,650 (for 2018) or the maximum set by the plan (any carryover does not apply toward the $2,650 cap). | No | Yes, up to the total contribution limit ($3,450 in 2018 for self-only coverage and $6,900 in 2018 for family coverage); individuals aged 55 or greater may contribute an additional $1,000. |
| May an employer contribute to the account? | Yes, up to the employee's contribution, or $500, whichever is greater. Non-elective employer contributions (seed money or matching contributions) do not count toward the FSA contribution limit, so long as they are within the employer limits for contributions. | Yes | Yes, up to the total contribution limit described above. |
| May another person or entity contribute to the account? | No | No | Yes – anyone may contribute to an HSA, up to the total contribution limit. |
| Does the spouse's coverage matter? | No. However, if one spouse has an HFSA that is not limited use, it will prevent the other spouse from being HSA eligible. | An employer may – but is not required to – integrate the HRA with coverage through the spouse's employer.QSE HRANo. The spouse's coverage is not relevant. | Yes. If the employee is covered by a non-HDHP through the spouse (which may include an HFSA or an HRA), the employee will not be eligible to contribute to an HSA. |
| Is a formal account required? | No, a notational/ bookkeeping account is allowed. | No, a notational/ bookkeeping account is allowed. | Yes, a trust or custodial account is required. Generally, this is done at a bank or credit union. |
